

5 Hotel Restaurants That Even Locals Love

Annie Reeves

More often than not when we travel, we opt out of the hotel dining options. Known for lackluster, overpriced menus, we find ourselves much more likely to hop in a cab or wander down the street to the latest hot spot to grab a bite. However, hotel dining is making a comeback. Boutique hotels across the South are offering mouth-watering dishes in inviting and trendy spaces. We have to say, it is mighty convenient to head down to the lobby instead of navigating the city after a long day of travel, so we'll be booking our next trips to these, a few hotels where dining in is not settling for convenience, but experiencing the best of the city.

5 Hotel Restaurants Not to Miss

Henrietta's

The Dewberry | Charleston, SC

A French brasserie serving breakfast, lunch, dinner and an outstanding brunch, Henrietta's is located in the heart of Charleston's downtown. Inside mid-century modern hotel The Dewberry, Henrietta's is flooded with natural light and has a patio for al fresco dining. The bustling bistro's menu includes French-inspired dishes with, of course, a Southern twist. Enjoy a cup of Vidalia onion soup with a seasonal salad on a cool evening, or opt for a Sunday brunch of quiche Lorraine and Geechie Boy grits. SB TIP: Stop into The Living Room for pre- or post-dinner drinks. Modeled after a mid-century living room, the space will take you back in time.

Choose from a cozy booth in the bar or the brasserie-feel of the main dining room. Image: Henrietta's

Stop into Henrietta's for a brunch that won't disappoint. Image: Henrietta's