The InterContinental® Miami: A Work of Art

The InterContinental® Miami was designed by Pietro Belluschi, the renowned architect who designed the Pan American building in New York City. Built in the early 80s, no expense was spared. The travertine marble was imported from Italy, the slabs were numbered when cut so when reassembled in Miami the slabs followed the same vein. An entire quarry was emptied to build the hotel and the adjacent business tower, the Miami Center. The hotel and tower are a single structure and are considered the largest marble structure in Florida.

Precious woods imported from Africa, including the rare Babinga were used throughout the entire hotel. Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of the hotel is that it is the only hotel lobby in the world to have been built around a work of art. In 1981, internationally renowned English sculptor Henry Moore (1898-1986) created the 18-ft, 70-ton Spindle sculpture. Made of travertine marble with a base of ooba tooba granite from Brazil, it was dropped into the lobby space by helicopter and from that point the hotel lobby was built. The Spindle is the largest of the artist's sculptures in private ownership and is appraised at over $20 million.

Food & Beverage Offerings

ToroToro

Toro Toro is celebrated chef/restaurateur Richard Sandoval's creative Pan-Latin interpretation of a contemporary steakhouse. Its sophisticated and sexy concept is modeled after Sandoval's Dubai Toro Toro, which was named "Best Latin" and "Best New Restaurant" by Time Out. The restaurant's selection of meats from the rodizio, along with an array of small plates, composed main-plates and a la carte steaks lures foodies while Toro Toro's buzz-worthy bar, emphasizing Latin-inspired cocktails made with ultra-premium Latin spirits and a curated collection of fine wines from around the world, draws the cocktail crowd. Located on the Lobby Level. torotoromiami.com
