Pup-tacular vacations await in San Francisco

GETTY

From cable cars and pastel mansions to the Golden Gate Bridge and Alcatraz, it's easy to see why San Francisco is one of the most visited cities in the United States. It may be a bit crowded and expensive, but the good news for visitors is that all the competition is driving hotels to the upper echelon of style and service, giving you options galore.

For cultured cats and dogs making visits to the Golden Gate City this year, here are the best pet-friendly hotels in San Francisco.

The Ritz-Carlton San Francisco

Ride a historic cable car to the front door of the Ritz-Carlton San Francisco to experience the historic romance of the city firsthand (there's a stop right outside the hotel). In posh Nob Hill, this luxurious hotel is just a short drive from the famed Painted Ladies (those colorful Victorian mansions you've seen in a thousand TV shows and movies) and surrounded by the mansions of yesterday's tycoons and today's innovators. Pets up to 30 pounds are welcome to join for a flat $200 fee.

Cavallo Point Lodge

If you're looking for Golden Gate views (and who isn't?), you're most idyllic chance at getting a great shot of the oft-fogged bridge is by staying at the Cavallo Point Lodge just a step outside the city with sprawling bridge views. Set among 24 former military buildings, primarily officers' quarters, in Fort Baker (now a national park), the Sausalito lodge assists in preserving the site for the National Park Service while providing unique lodging opportunities for visitors, including pets. For $150 per stay, up to two pets of any size are welcome to join you in most rooms.

Hyatt Centric Fisherman's Wharf

For the quintessential San Francisco experience (and all the photos to prove it), check in to the Hyatt Centric Fisherman's Wharf. Hyatt Centric is aimed at Millennial-minded travelers with bold energy around every corner (read: Instagrammable), and Fisherman's Wharf is one of the most-visited neighborhoods in the city. One pup 50 pounds or lighter (or two dogs with a combined weight of 75 pounds) is welcome for a $100 fee per stay up to 6 days (a cleaning fee applies for longer stays).

Palace Hotel

Step into a world of Gilded Age glamor at the Palace Hotel. The city's first luxury hotel, The Palace was the largest in the world when it first opened in 1875, and the chandeliers of The Garden Court are still taking breath away daily. It's razzle-dazzle all the way here, and you won't want to be seen without your most beloved accessory, your faithful pet. Luckily, The Palace welcomes one dog (up to 15 pounds) per reservation for a $75 (per night) fee.

Argonaut

Inside a former Fisherman's Wharf warehouse of brick and beam, originally built in 1907, the Argonaut is as fond of its past as it is proud of its innovative spirit (check out the designated "tall rooms" with longer beds and higher shower heads for vertically advantaged guests). The boutique property is both family-friendly and pet-friendly, welcoming pets of any size for an addition $75 each per stay. (There is an additional cleaning fee for stays seven days or longer.)

Hotel Zeppelin San Francisco

Located in San Francisco's creative hub, Union Square, Hotel Zeppelin prides itself on bucking tradition and honoring the rebels, the revolutionaries and the forward thinkers of the artistic world. Expect impactful design, visual surprises and some serious attitude (the good kind) at this avant-garde boutique property. Edgy pets are always welcome here (traditional ones, too), with no size restrictions, for a one-time $75 cleaning fee.

The Marker

For a more traditional Union Square area stay that still honors the creativity and vibrancy of the neighborhood and its cultural history, The Marker is a recently renovated Beaux-Arts-style hotel featuring eye-catching jewel tones and pattern-packed accents. Formerly the Bellevue Hotel and long known for hospitality and service, pets are welcome to join you at this premier property for a fee of $75 each (up to 2) and will receive food and water bowls, treats and comfy beds.
