Anguilla has had a lot to cheer about in March, as several major hotels have either reopened or begun accepting bookings following the devastation of Hurricane Irma back in September.

In case you lost track, here are the latest hotel updates from Anguilla.

Four Seasons Anguilla Reopens on Schedule

Back in early January, the Four Seasons Resort and Residences Anguilla announced it would reopen March 23 following months of restoration due to the impact of Hurricane Irma.

Last week, that announcement came to fruition as Anguilla welcomed back one of its most popular luxury resorts.

“Four Seasons Resort and Residences Anguilla enjoyed significant popularity with our guests from around the world during our first year of operation,” said Vince Parrotta, Four Seasons’ president of hotel operations in the Americas, in a written statement. “Travelers and residence owners are eager to return and we’re happy to welcome them back to the beauty of Anguilla.”

Since the resort opened as the Viceroy Anguilla in 2010 and was converted to a Four Seasons in 2016, it has garnered much buzz amongst Millennial couples traveling with other couples, as well as Baby Boomers, for its intimacy and access to multiple beaches.

“We have worked tirelessly and leveraged Starwood Capital Group’s strategic relationships around the world to reopen as soon as possible,” said Roy Shanholz, vice president of hotel asset management at Starwood Capital Group. “I have been here through every step of this process and welcoming guests back and having our employees back to work has been my goal since day one.”
